Battle of Crete 1941 Wehrmacht Airborne Forces

Airborne operations came into their own during World War II. The Germans first used airborne forces in Western Europe, striking against Allied forces in France, the Low Countries, and Norway. As the war progressed, Germany orchestrated an airborne assault on the island of Crete, an action that would leave Hitler hesitant to use this strategy later in the war.

The Defense of Bataan American/Philippine Heroic Stand in the Midst of Defeat

With the attack on Pearl Harbor, Japan launched a corresponding invasion of the Philippines on 8 December 1941. Poorly organized and supplied, the American/Filipino forces waged a determined resistance against the Japanese invaders.

Zhukov's Greatest Defeat?

On 25 November 1942, the Soviet Union unleashed a massive barrage against German defenses in Operation Mars. The Soviets launched seven Tank Corps and 37 rifle divisions against the German Ninth Army. In the end, little ground was gained despite the heavy Soviet casualties suffered in the operation.

Hitler's Greatest Mistake The Survival of Great Britain

In the summer of 1940, Germany was poised to control all of Europe. The last bastion of the Allies in Europe was Great Britain. Convinced he could knock Britain out of the war, Hitler commenced the Battle of Britain and prepared Operation Sea Lion. Great Britain survived, and helped lead the eventual downfall of Nazi Germany.
