Strike North:

Japan vs. the Soviet Union, 1941
One of the great what-ifs of World War II was Japan attacking the Soviet Union in 1941 rather than striking against the Western powers in the Pacific and south Asia. Such an attack would've radically changed the course of not only World War II across the Asia-Pacific region, but that of the entirety of the rest of history.

Stalin's Red Orchestra: The Spy Ring in Germany & Occupied Europe

Here's the story of the wartime Soviet espionage network that operated in both occupied Western Europe and Germany proper. It's a story that has elements of both drama and farce.

The Kamenets-Podolsky Pocket: Hube's Great Escape

Early in April 1944, in the northwestern Ukraine, the encircled First Panzer Army was cut off by the Soviets. Unlike other pocket battles of that size, here the Germans got away cleanly. That escape had important—and disastrous—ramifications for German strategy in the east during the remainder of that year.

The Long Range Desert Group & Special Air Service

The Long Range Desert Group (LRDG) and Special Air Service (SAS), whose origins lay in World War II, were the forebears of many of today's most elite units and the tactics they still employ.

Beyond the Urals

Ziplock Game

Beyond the Urals:

The Final Campaign in Russia, 1942

A two-player strategic-level simulation of a campaign that might have been in Russia during World War II. The game postulates the Germans had defeated the Red Army in their 1941 invasion of the Soviet Union, but failed to force the capitulation of the Soviet Union itself.

Contents: One 22"x34" map,
176 die-cut counters
