

W87 Netherlands East Indies Errata and Clarifications

13.0 Amphibious Operations, G-3 Naval Amphibious Movement, G-3 Amphibious Assault (clarification). All unit types (marine and non-marine) can disembark on any type of coast, regardless of the presence of a port. If there are enemy ground units in the same area, the disembarking ground units must engage in an amphibious assault. The naval units conducting the Amphibious Movement or Assault must cease movement in that square.

G-3 Naval Evacuation of Ground Units (clarification). What point (2) means is that the amphibious unit starts and ends the action in the square in which the ground units are picked up. They can move out in the next Action. Under point (3) Emergency Transport can move off with the marine units in the same Action.

21.4 Japanese First Air Fleet & G-2 1AF Carrier Special Attack (clarification)

If placed in a square which contains both Allied naval and land units, the Japanese player can attack one or the other (per G-3 Naval Force Move and/or Attack, or G-3 Carrier Strike Against Land Units). Also, if there are more than one type of Allied unit which can be attacked in that particular action, then attack each according to Combat Sequencing (12.0). For each such attack, roll three dice and apply results successively.

Example: The Japanese place 1AF in a sea zone containing both Allied surface and submarine units. First conduct the Anti-Surface attack (rolling three times) and then the Anti-Submarine attack (rolling another three times).

7.4 Singapore Control, 17.0 Air Basing (clarification). Players can base an unlimited number of air units in Singapore. See 19.1 Home Base Capacity.

19.3 Allied Home Bases (clarification). Darwin is not part of the Australia Home Base. Note that both Allied Home Bases are completely off the map, unlike the three Japanese Home Bases and Singapore.
